TWO LOCAL BOYS PAY THE PRICE sacrifice. Pete Lambert was one of Munson's finest young men, was 19 years old and enlisted with a Calgary Battalion last July and has been in the trenches for several months, having been wounded once during that time. He was a native of Kansas, the family coming to Canada about 2 years ago.

Pete Leonard Elliott is reported killed according to a letter received from different boys at the front. Pete Elliott was a member of the firm of Elliott Bros., merchants, at the time he enlisted, and his parents reside in England.

Pete W. D. Lenn, Rumsey,

FARMERS' SUNDAY.

The farmer is vitally interested in all things which affect his material property, his social, moral and intellectual life. Further his interest in these things extends to his neighbors, and friends everywhere.

The church is not merely sympathetic but deeply concerned to bring about a realization of the highest ideals among, not only the farmers, but all classes of our rural community.

It is fitting then that we observe Farmers' Sunday, May 27th, as Farmers' Sunday. I would make an earnest appeal to all farmers to attend the services, together with their friends and families.

The collections on this day will be devoted to the Military work of the Y. M. C. A. and a liberal response is looked for, for such a needy cause.

The services will be held as follows: Sunbeam, 11 a. m., Morrin.

PREVENTION OF COAL SHORTAGE

This winter we have had a coal "famine" and that suffering has accompanied the shortage of this necessity is undeniable. The average citizen has a notoriously short memory, but now is the time to impress him that, in many cases, the suffering was due to lack of foresight. In Canada many people buy in small quantities—often only one ton. If, for any cause, there is a shortage of coal, improvident householders demand that the coal dealers do the impossible, namely, that they supply fuel that is unobtainable. Whereas, had they purchased their coal in the summer or autumn, they would have been amply available.

While some large consumers such as manufacturers, cannot store a six months' supply, most householders can, with their present bins or with enlarged bins, store coal to meet their requirements till March or April.

In recent years, we have had two coal "famines," first in 1901-02, the year of the coal miners' strike, and, second, this year, when the severity of the weather and the extraordinary prosperity in the United States caused an unprecedented congestion of freight. A survey of conditions in the United States demonstrated that in the future there will be more coal "famines" than in the past and that they will occur at shorter intervals. For this there is only one remedy:

Buy your coal in the summer.
If you have not sufficient storage, enlarge your coal bin.

An Overseas Institute

empire to be strengthened in their love and allegiance to the Fatherland? This is the problem which is being forced by the founders of the Institute and Museum in the interests of overseas Germans at Stuttgart.

After the war there will be tremendous changes, and Germany may reasonably look forward in time to overseas trade. No time must be lost in arranging for the necessary supply of all available raw materials; equally urgent is the question of an extension of markets for finished manufactures. The cordial co-operation of the overseas German community is absolutely necessary.

These and similar thoughts occupied the founders of an institute which has since its economic knowledge of overseas

They are to embrace the intellectual and material possessions of the overseas German, and, in addition, much that is important in the frame in which his life is set. The German settlements, trade, domestic life, and its arrangements, clothing, utensils of all sorts, the produce of the soil, arts and crafts, objects of industry, means of transport and communication, and all that fitly illustrate or explains the scientific, ar-

But this is not all. There will be an important department devoted to the shipping lines trading with foreign countries where Germans are settled, another will illustrate the German press in those countries, and a third will be devoted to German schools. Special attention will be given to displaying processes of manufacture from the raw material to the finished article. The fair is organized so that Germany is largely interested in goods which are produced by Germans such as cornea, coffee, cotton and rubber. Finally there will be the institute and the hall which will be the main attraction on a vast and very complete scale. Much shelf-room

Afternoon Gowns Trend to Beaded Elaboration

Beads and Treatment Suggest the Squaw's Dress

THE original Anglo-Saxon meaning of the word bead was prayer. To what extent the meaning has been stretched is exemplified in the frocks on this page. Never has there been a season when beads played such an important part in the drama of fashion. They are used on everything that has any connection with woman's wardrobe.

On the ecru frock of crepe de chine the beads are used in an attractive design to trim the double belt and the long sash end. Strings of the beads form a fringe for the end of the sash. An interesting feature of the sleeve is the rent just below the point of the elbow. This slashing idea, by the way, is used frequently through the fashionable world, the slashed edge as a rule being picoté.

A beaded surplice which develops into a deep grille is the prominent note of a deep pink crepe de chine model fastening down the front from neck to hem with buttons and satin-bound buttonholes. The deep sailor collar has a border and tassels of beads to correspond with the trimming in front.

So many frocks are collarless this season. One model in this class is the biscuit-colored crepe de chine frock whose neck line is finished with a beaded band of ribbon. The ribbon is used also to form straps falling over the shoulders, down the front and back of the bodice. Notice how the ribbon effect is carried out by the clever placing of the beads on the deep grille, at the top of the hem and on the sides of the skirt. The deep tuck which simulates a jacket and the odd treatment of the sleeves are other noteworthy features. The hat is interesting in that it illustrates the use of chenille as a trimming. The velvety material is used to form the ornament in front and the stitches taken on the brim and crown.

Beads and the treatment of them on the dark green chiffon frock are most suggestive of the squaw's dress. Even the straight apron effect down the front of the skirt brings to mind the straight lines of the dark maiden's costume. One word of warning: this particular arrangement of beads is to be avoided by the person who is inclined to have a broad figure. The hem of contrasting material—green taffeta in this case—and the collarless nature of the bodice are salient points to be observed.

An ingenious use of beads has been made on the dark blue chiffon. Here many colored grains, as the beads are known by the French, are arranged to simulate a Scotch plaid. As if this effort were not enough to place the model in the first ranks of fashion, it has taken unto itself sleeves of an odd character. Here the back of the sleeve has been slashed near the cuff and allowed to fall in a graceful manner. A sash of dark blue satin, weighted with bead tassels, encircles the body twice, after the manner of fashions of the season. The satin is repeated in the band defining the neck line.

No matter what material or what trimming you select for your afternoon gown, bear in mind the fact that the gown must be of a more elaborate character than heretofore.
